Comparing Past and Present

Before we compare toys from the past and present we need to look at the key features of those toys and how they have been improved or changed. Why don't some toys have lights and sounds? Why are some toys made out of plastic now instead of metal? From knowing these key features and knowing why toys have changed we can then make a judgment on which toys are better those from the past or those from the present.

Which toys do you recognise?

Do you have any of these toys at home? Have you played with some of them before?
